Lemberg, Lviv, and Lvov are different names for the same city, which was the provincial capital of what the Austrians called Ruthenia, the official name of the Ruthenian country. It is situated south of the Dniester River, in the territory of today's Lviv Oblast, Ukraine.

In the context of the image, it is mentioned that Lemberg was the capital of Ruthenia during the Austrian rule, and it remained the capital of Galicia after the establishment of the Austrian Galician Republic in 1845. During the reign of the Habsburgs, it was a center of cultural and intellectual life, hosting numerous scientific institutions and universities.

However, the main focus of the text is on the Austrian Galician Republic, which was established after the failed 1848 Hungarian revolution against Austria. The republic was created as a result of the 1848-49 revolutions in the Austrian Empire, which sought to democratize the empire and grant more autonomy to its constituent territories.

The text also mentions the difficulties faced by the republic, such as the lack of resources and the challenge of managing a multi-ethnic population. Despite these challenges, the republic played a significant role in the cultural and intellectual life of Galicia, fostering the development of Ruthenian literature and education.

In conclusion, the text highlights the significance of Lemberg as a historical city and its role as the capital of Ruthenia during the Austrian rule, as well as its continued importance as a center of culture and politics after the establishment of the Austrian Galician Republic. The text also underscores the challenges faced by the republic, but emphasizes its contribution to the cultural and intellectual life of Galicia.

Retired Ukrainian Priest Helps Save Oil Canisters Brush Fire

PULASKI, Calif. - Rev. Sylvester Balko, a priest of the Ursuline Diocese of the diocese of the Bishops of the diocese of the area, who is now retired, began "wielding a slashing ax" around his three mobile homes on the area, the 100 acres of land at Barbot Junction as soon as he saw smoke from a oil canister brush fire.

Balko said he saw two tanks, to which he always wants to go, and the smoke was coming from a tank in the area.

Balko, who has been a priest for 30 years, said that he always wants to go to the tank.

"We know it would be risky," he said. "But we knew it was important to do it."

Balko quickly grabbed a shovel and a hose and started fighting the fire.

"We knew the fire would spread," he said. "But we knew it was important to do it."

The fire was eventually brought under control, and Balko feels that he made a difference.

"I always want to go to the tank," he said. "But I always want to go to the tank when I can."
